Chapter 1 by Justin Chan

Being a superhero with the ability to control is way more boring than it sounds: when you have stopped all of the world's crimes, what do you do then?

I used to be just Jason Watson, your average try-hard cop, but then one day, with his dying breath, the hero that we know as the Quantum Phantom passed his famous time warping armour and his title to me. He is a nerdy scientist named Edward Williams, I think his true identity really makes him sound kinda lame, his armour makes him look really beefy and menacing.

I know what you are thinking, he can change time, why did he let himself die? I think the real question is, do you know that time isn't a toy that you can just mess around infinitely? There are consequences to every change you make, to make it plain, Edwards time has to come to an end.

Chapter 2 by Cheshire_in_Wonderland

The first time I had put on the armor of his, it felt great.

It looked pretty winpy on me, though cause of how thin I am and how much muscle needs to fill the suit.

That's it.

and it happens to be incredibly boring.
